

Lead Facilitator

Carol Clyde

Dr. Carol Clyde moved to Dallas and joined Southern Methodist University (SMU) as the Director of Leadership and Community Involvement in July of 2003. Professionally, she has developed community service and leadership development programs, directed internship initiatives, and served for a year as an AmeriCorps member. She is an adjunct instructor with SMU's Simmons School of Education and Human Development and the Meadows School of the Arts. Carol is active in a number of local organizations that promote community service and develops future leaders, such as Leadership Dallas, the Dallas Junior League and is an instructor for a local adult literacy program. Carol attended Radford University and The College of William and Mary and received a Doctor of Education from Florida Atlantic University. For fun, she loves fostering Labrador Retrievers and playing pool.
