

Lead Facilitator

Jennifer Robbins

Jennifer Robbins has a passion for working with lifelong learners of all ages. A native of the Chicago suburbs, Jennifer is a graduate of Indiana University in Bloomington, where she earned Bachelors degrees in Communications and Political Science and a Masters Degree in Student Affairs Administration. But she believes it was experiences outside the classroom— working with students in residence halls and participating in student activities and leadership development programs—that helped shape her into the leader and trainer she is today.

Jennifer is the Director of Operations for The Burchard Group, a training company who inspires and instructs people how to improve their lives and share their voices. She is also the owner of Ignite Development, and works with select clients to build and create youth development initiatives. Before taking on these roles, Jennifer was the Assistant Director of The LeaderShape Institute, a 6-day intensive leadership experience for college students. Now, she travels around the country to work with a wide variety of youth and adult programs.

When she's not focused on building leaders and high performing teams at work, Jennifer can be found at home in Indianapolis, IN, watching movies, cooking great food and laughing with friends.
